DAN SMOOT

CONGRESS OR DICTATOR'S ASSEMBLY?

United States Representative Thomas M. Pelly (Republican, Washington) says that Congress, delegating its constitutional responsibilities to the President, is on the road to becoming a mere rubber-stamp, thus betraying the nation and losing its identity as a great legislative body, to become a mere dictator's assembly.

Congressional voting, on key issues recorded in this Report, indicates how much accuracy is in Mr. Pelly's warning.

Farm Bill

The following is an abbreviated passage from an article by Harold Cowan, published in the June 25, 1962, issue of the Omaha, Nebraska, World-Herald, with a Belgrade, Nebraska, dateline:

Lee Brown is a soft-voiced, friendly 56-year-old bachelor who lives with his widowed mother near Belgrade. He dropped out of high school to go to work. He works as a farmhand part of the time and digs a livelihood from his own 39 acres. He milks two cows for the cream, keeps a couple of dozen old hens for the eggs, and hoes a garden for fresh vegetables. Most of the 39 acres are in pasture.

Yet there is that patch of wheat on his acreage near the road. It is an irregularly shaped piece of scraggly, rust-infected grain just beginning to ripen, but it is wheat — perhaps two-thirds of an acre of it. It would make 10 or 12 bushels at harvest, he guesses. The wheat was intended as scratch feed for his old hens. And the crop was a cover on ground planted to corn in previous years, which lay fallow last year. He hired the wheat put in. The seed, plowing, and discing cost him 27 dollars.

A week ago Friday, a county Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service official telephoned and asked if he was growing wheat. He confessed that he was. He was told he must get rid of it. A letter from the official followed, saying:

"This farm has no 1962 wheat allotment. Therefore, the wheat cover will be subsequently checked for destruction. Any harvestable wheat remaining after June 26 will be considered penalty wheat. Excess wheat must be incorporated into the soil by discing or plowing."

Mr. Brown figured the penalty would be 30 to 35 dollars, depending on the amount of grain he might harvest from the crop. He said he would hire a man to plow it under.

Reflecting on all this, Mr. Brown said:

"Now ain't that enough to give you the scours?"

This preposterous nonsense will give the whole nation the scours if we do not elect a Congress with the sense and courage to stop it.

The Kennedy Farm Bill of 1962 (providing a supply-management system to impose a communist-fascist type of regimentation on all farmers producing major commodities now in great surplus)[1] would have multiplied opportunities for corruption of the type revealed by the Billie Sol Estes case; and it would have multiplied the instances of senseless bureaucratic tyranny like that reflected in the Lee Brown case.

Nonetheless, the Senate, on May 25, 1962, passed S 3225, which was, in essence, the Administration Bill; and then, Kennedy tried to use the power of the public purse to force House passage of the Bill. Administration officials even called leading businessmen throughout the nation, threatening cancellation of government spending in their communities unless their representatives voted for the President's farm bill. And the businessmen, fearing loss of government contracts, put pressure on their representatives.[2]

But the House of Representatives killed Kennedy's communist-fascist agricultural program for the current session. On June 21, 1962, the House, by the narrow margin of 212 to 222 (with 3 Representatives neither voting nor publicly taking a stand), the House rejected HR 11222 — companion piece to S 3225, which the Senate had passed on May 25, 1962, by a roll-call stand of 55 to 42, with 3 Senators not voting or taking a stand.

The Senate vote on President Kennedy's 1962 Farm Bill is set out in column 2 below, under "Senate." The House vote is set out in column 2 under "House."

Debt Increase

On June 14, 1962, the House of Representatives — displaying what U. S. Representative August E. Johansen called "contemptible cowardice" in succumbing to Administration "blackmail" — by a roll-call stand of 223 to 204 (with 10 Representatives not taking a stand) passed HR 11990, authorizing an increase in the national debt to 308 billion dollars, as demanded by the President.[3]

On June 28, 1962, the Senate, by a roll-call stand of 65 to 34 (with 1 Senator not taking a stand) passed HR 11990, without amendments.

The Senate vote on the debt increase is recorded below in column 5 under "Senate"; the House vote, in column 1 under "House."

Trade Expansion Act

A major step toward economic surrender of the United States will be taken if the Senate passes the President's Trade Expansion Act of 1962 (HR 11970, passed by the House on June 28, 1962). In lobbying for the Trade Bill, Administration officials said it will promote the ideal of world-wide free trade. In fact, the Trade Bill will promote the ideal of world-wide government cartels controlling all trade and commerce.

The Constitution places in Congress sole power to regulate commerce with foreign nations. Congress partially abdicated this responsibility in 1934 when it authorized the so-called Reciprocal Trade Program, permitting the President to adjust tariffs within specified limits.

President Kennedy did not ask for extension of the "Reciprocal" Trade Program in 1962. Rather, he asked Congress for limitless authority to do just about anything the President pleases with the economy of America, in making economic and political deals with foreign governments.[4]

The Trade Expansion Act of 1962 (HR 11970) would give the President substantially all of the unconstitutional power he demands.

On June 28, 1962 — just one week after rejecting the President's Farm Bill — the House surprised the nation by enacting HR 11970. The stand was 301 to 130, with 6 Representatives not taking a stand.

The House vote is recorded in column 5 below.

The Act is not yet law, because the Senate has not passed it.

Textile Imports Control Act

On April 11, 1962, the House, by a stand of 312 to 81 (with 44 Representatives not taking a stand) passed HR 10788, extending and enlarging the President's "authority" to make deals with foreign governments concerning the imports of textiles and agricultural products.

This Administration Bill (providing for tariff-and-quota protection against foreign imports for specified commodities, at the pleasure of the President, at a time when the President was demanding the Trade Expansion Act to abolish tariff-and-quota protectionism in the interest of "free trade") was characterized by U. S. Representative Clarence J. Brown (Republican, Ohio) as an Administration "deal" to buy support (from Southern textile interests) for the President's tax and trade bills.[5]

The House roll-call vote on HR 10788 is recorded in column 3 under "House," below. The Senate has not yet acted on the Bill.

Voter Qualifications

The Constitution clearly and emphatically leaves with state governments the authority to establish qualifications for voters. Some states impose a literacy qualification — intended to keep illiterate persons (white or colored) from being herded into elections. The Kennedy Administration asked Congress for a bill to provide that anyone with a sixth grade education must be declared literate and eligible to vote (whether he could meet the state requirements for literacy or not).

Senate Bill 2750 provided what the President wanted. Such federal legislation would obviously violate the letter and intent of our Constitution. Nonetheless, S 2750 was supported by leaders of both political parties. Senate Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (Republican, Illinois) and Majority Leader Mike Mansfield (Democrat, Montana) were the principal advocates of the Bill.

On May 14, 1962, the Senate, in a stand of 46 to 54, killed S 2750, by rejecting a Dirksen-Mansfield effort to stop a Southern filibuster against the Bill. The vote is recorded in column 4 under "Senate" below.

Standby Public Works Act of 1962

On May 28, 1962, the Senate, by a stand of 53 to 39 (with 8 Senators not taking a stand), passed the Standby Public Works Act of 1962 (S 2965), authorizing the President to spend 750 million dollars for job-creating public works in areas which the President decides are suffering from unemployment; and authorizing an additional 750 million dollar appropriation for a standby public works program after June 30, 1963. The Bill clearly violates our Constitution; and it gives the President another enormous slush fund with which to bribe and threaten Congress and businessmen into support of Administration schemes.

The Senate vote on S 2965 is recorded in column 3 under "Senate" below.

The House has not yet acted on the Bill.

Foreign Assistance Act of 1962

The Congress offered practically no opposition to the President's Foreign Assistance Act of 1962. The Senate did register protest against that portion of the Foreign Aid Bill which authorizes the President to give aid to communist countries. On June 6, 1962, the Senate passed the Lausche Amendment prohibiting the sale or gift of surplus agricultural commodities to any country known to be dominated by communism or marxism.

In retrospect, much of this particular Senate action looks like a cruel hoax on the public. Many ardent liberals voted for the Lausche Amendment—apparently just to make a record which they could show their conservative constituents, knowing that the Senate would reverse itself.

Indeed, the next day (June 7, 1962), the Senate adopted the Mansfield-Dirksen Amendment (Mike Mansfield, Democrat from Montana; and Everett McKinley Dirksen, Republican from Illinois) killing the Lausche Amendment.

So, the Foreign Assistance Act of 1962 (S 2996) as passed by the Senate on June 7, 1962, continues the program of giving aid to communist countries — in the interest of "fighting communism," of course. The Senate roll-call on this Bill (73 Senators for, 27 Senators against) is recorded in column 1 below, under "Senate."

There is no hope of killing the foreign aid program in this Congress. But a freshman in the House is making one valiant effort to stop aid to communist countries. On June 13, 1962, Joe D. Waggonner, Jr. (Democrat, Louisiana) introduced HJR 741 to end all foreign aid to all communist dominated nations.

Television Sets

On May 2, 1962, the House, by a stand of 279 to 90 (with 68 Representatives not taking a stand), passed HR 8031, an Administration Bill, authorizing the FCC to require manufacturers to equip all television sets for sale in interstate commerce to receive the 70 ultra high frequency channels (UHF) in addition to the 12 very high frequency channels (VHF) which most sets are now equipped for.

The argument for the Bill was that it would make more tv channels available and, thus, increase competition among tv stations. But the federal government has no constitutional right to tell manufacturers what they must manufacture. Hence, the bill is undesirable even if all motives behind it are pure.

There is question about the purity of motive, however. The UHF channels (the ones which the Bill would force all manufacturers to equip for) are the ones generally used for "educational" television; and the federal government is already unconstitutionally involved in subsidizing educational tv stations.[6]

HR 8031 could be a subtle step toward federal domination of educational television.

It is too bad that manufacturers do not equip some tv sets to receive UHF channels; but forcing them to equip all sets for UHF (as this bill would do) would be bureaucratic nonsense (in addition to any sinister aspects that may be involved), because this would require manufacturers to produce, and consumers to buy, equipment that millions of users would never use.

At any rate, Representatives and Senators sworn to uphold the Constitution of the United States violate their oath in voting for such a Bill as this.

The vote on HR 8031 is recorded in column 4 under "House" below.
